ABSTRACT

Information on 3,107 postsecondary institutions is provided to help students make informed college choices. A total of 1,157 of the colleges are members of the College Board. In addition to general information about the college, attention is directed to the curriculum, admissions, student life, annual expenses, financial aid, and where to write or call for more information. The following characteristics about the college are covered: number of years of undergraduate education available; type of institution (e.g., liberal arts college, university, community college); public, private, or proprietary status; single sex or coeducational status; religious affiliation, if any; and the year the college was founded. The profiles also cover: accreditation, undergraduate and graduate enrollments, degrees offered, calendar, location, campus environment, library holdings, special features, special academic programs, academic regulations, placement or credit, student activities, athletics, and student services. Guidelines for choosing a college and paying for school are included. A list of the fields and a glossary are provided, along with summary statistics for the entire sample on admissions, student life, annual expenses, and financial aid. (SW)

A message about the College Board

The College Board is a nonprofit membership association composed of colleges, schools, systems, and education associations and agencies serving secondary and higher education. The Board helps students who are making the move from high school to college through programs and services that include guidance, admissions, placement, credit by examination, and financial aid.

The College Handbook is an official publication of the College Board. A total of 1,157 of the institutions listed in this book are members of the College Board (you can identify them by this oak leaf symbol ❦ at the end of their description). As a College Board member, these institutions—through the participation of their representatives in national and regional meetings, councils, advisory committees, and task forces—voice concerns on significant educational issues and help shape Board-sponsored programs and services used by more than 2.5 million students every year. Virtually every high school and college in the nation is affected by these services.

The more than 3,100 postsecondary institutions described in the Handbook—both College Board members and nonmembers—voluntarily provide the information presented here to assist students in making informed college choices. These institutions are committed to increasing students' awareness of their options and thus expanding their educational opportunities. As the leading authoritative source of information on colleges and universities throughout the United States, The College Handbook has become, in its 46 years of publication, a trusted resource to students in the midst of the school-to-college transition.

Preface

Since the first edition was published in 1941, The College Handbook has provided generations of students and their advisers with the authoritative and up-to-date information required to make informed college decisions. Developed by college admissions officers and high school counselors, and supported by the ongoing cooperation of the educational community, the Handbook has become the classic guide to higher education.

The content and format of the Handbook are revised each year to meet the needs of college-bound students. There are 3,107 descriptions in this edition of the Handbook. To be included in the Handbook, an institution must meet the criteria for inclusion in the Education Directory: Colleges and Universities published by the National Center for Education Statistics. The criteria are set by the U.S. Department of Education Division of Eligibility and Agency Evaluation. This includes colleges accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or approved by a state department of education or a state university, colleges that have attained preaccredited status with a nationally recognized accrediting agency, and public and nonprofit colleges whose credits have been accepted as if coming from an accredited institution by at least three accredited institutions. The other criterion for inclusion in the Handbook is that the college offer some undergraduate programs. Six institutions located in foreign countries are included in the Handbook on the basis of their membership in the College Board.

The descriptions were compiled from information supplied by the colleges themselves on the College Board's Annual Survey of Colleges, 1986-87. The survey was completed by participating colleges in the winter and spring of 1986. Colleges that did not reply to the initial survey were contacted, and their information was updated by telephone. We extend our sincere thanks to the thousands of college officers across the country who supplied detailed information about their institutions. Without their cooperation, publication of the Handbook would not be possible.

The information supplied by colleges was verified for accuracy by a staff of ten editors—Jane Callahan, Julie Fasciana, Renee Gernand, Jane Hartford, Erin Hayes, Mauryne Horan, Jill Newman, Ronald Nicosia, Andrew Rosenbloom, and Hannah Selby. Jean Marzone directed the editing and Brooke Breslow coordinated the data-base activities.

Choosing a college

More than 2.5 million students start college each fall. For most of them, the first day on campus marks the end of a year or more of anxious planning, difficult choices, and plain hard work. If you are just beginning the college selection process, the planning, choices, and hard work are still ahead of you.

Chances are that you are both excited and bewildered by the prospect of choosing one college from the more than 3,000 accredited colleges in the United States. Maybe you are confused by the amount of information (and misinformation) that is available and by contradictory advice about "good" and "bad" colleges. Or maybe you do not have enough information about colleges and are not sure how to get the facts you need. If you are like many college-bound students, you are worried about grades and test scores, and whether you will be accepted by any of the colleges you think would be right for you.

Relax. Choosing a college is an important and sometimes difficult task, but if you plan now and take it step by step, chances are you will make a decision that is good for you. Before you begin, take a look at some of the myths that complicate the college decision-making process.

Myth	Fact
"There's one college that's exactly right for me."	Chances are that you won't find a college that is perfect in every way—the one and only choice for you—but you probably will find many colleges that meet some of your most important needs and objectives, and where you would be happy.
"All colleges are alike, so why waste time choosing?"	No two colleges are exactly alike and, in fact, some are very different. To make sure that you make the best possible choice, the selection process should be a careful one.
"The cost of a college education (or that college) is beyond my reach."	Millions of college students qualify for financial aid to cover the difference between what a college costs and what they can afford to pay. Don't rule out any college because of its cost until you find out whether you are eligible for financial aid.
"That college is too selective. I'll probably be rejected, so why apply?"	Don't second-guess college admissions officers. If you think you qualify for a college you would like to attend, you should apply. You may not be accepted (depending on the number of applicants and the qualifications of the other applicants), but you will never know if you don't try.
"If I can't go to my first-choice college (or don't like it when I get there), I'll be unhappy for the next four years."	Believe it or not, most students end up loving their second- or third- or fourth-choice college. The trick is to apply to several colleges where you think you would be happy. If it turns out to be a mistake, your decision is not irreversible. Thousands of students transfer to other colleges every year.

Why college?

If you are like many college-bound students, you probably made the decision to continue your education fairly early, even before you started high school. Looking back, you may find your reasons for making that decision are no longer clear to you, or the reasons may have changed, just as you have changed in the past few years. Whether you have always known you were going to college, or whether you are considering it now for the first time, take this opportunity to think about your reasons. If you can state your objectives clearly at the start, your college search will be much easier.

> "I've always known that I was going to go to college." (High school senior, Ohio)

Make a list of your reasons for going to college, putting your most important reason at the top of your list.

Discuss your reasons for going to college with your parents, counselors, friends, and anyone else who can help you focus on your long-term goals. Don't worry if your reasons are not the same as those of your friends or advisers; you are an individual and your reasons have to make sense to you.

Ask yourself if the best way to achieve your objectives is by going to college. If you think it is, then you are off to a good start.

> "Learning about colleges, selecting the ones I liked, and then deciding where to apply... those were the first really adult actions of my life. And it felt good."
> (High school senior, California)

What are you like?

The picture you have of yourself—of your abilities, interests, attitudes, and personality—plays an important role in the college decision-making process. What you know about yourself will help you define what you are looking for in a college. Try to get a clear picture of your strengths and weaknesses, your likes and dislikes.

The following questions may help you begin.

ACADEMIC. (Are you a good student, average, below average? Does your school record reflect your capabilities? What kinds of courses have you taken in high school? Do you excel, or are you weak, in any area? Do you learn best in a competitive or relaxed academic climate?)

extracurricular. (Do you participate in school activities? In community or local affairs? What clubs, sports, cultural groups do you belong to? Have you traveled? Much? Not at all? What are your interests and hobbies?)

Personal attitudes and values. (Do you prefer a familiar environment or are you ready for a change? Do you work best independently or with others? Do you want to go out on your own or stay near family or friends?)

Do you think others — your parents or a friend or a counselor — would agree with your self-description? How does your picture of yourself relate to your reasons for going to college? Are your objectives realistic based on what you know about your interests and abilities?

> "College is a . . . place in which one hopes to be able to be what one is, a place in which one hopes to be able to become what one is capable of becoming."
> (Donald E. Super, Preparing School Counselors in Educational Guidance)

College characteristics

> "My brother's room was wall-to-wall catalogs, but he never got around to reading half of them. I'm going to be more systematic when I start looking at colleges."
> (High school junior, Pennsylvania)

After you have explored your reasons for going to college and considered your own interests and abilities, it's time to investigate the kinds of higher education available to you.

More than 3,000 colleges, universities, technical institutes, junior colleges, seminaries, and other institutions of higher education are listed in The College Handbook, 1986-87. Almost all of them have programs for students entering college for the first time. You cannot learn about all these colleges in a few short months, so even before you start gathering information about individual colleges, you need to reduce the alternatives to a reasonable number without eliminating desirable choices.

Consider your list of objectives one at a time. Ask yourself what you need to know about a college in order to determine if you will be able to meet each of your objectives there.

Besides those college characteristics that are necessary for your educational objectives, there may be others that you want for personal reasons. You may want to be sure there is a church or synagogue nearby. A certain climate may be important for your health or for the opportunity to participate in your favorite sport during the school year. If you plan on frequent visits home, you will want to know about available transportation, travel time, and cost. Make a list of your personal requirements and refer to it as you search for colleges that would be appropriate for you.

The following worksheet lists some college characteristics mentioned frequently by students as important in the selection process. Not all of them will matter to you, and some will seem more important than others. You can duplicate this checklist, or use it as a model for creating your own characteristics list. Check only those characteristics that are important to you. To the right of each characteristic, indicate your specific requirement. Don't put down anything you are not sure about or try to limit your options too early in the college selection process. At this stage your aim should be to find out about many colleges that meet your most important requirements. You can always come back and add to the list as your needs and interests become clearer to you.

To see how quickly your list of characteristics will help you narrow your choice of colleges, consider the sample worksheet completed by Caroline Springer. Caroline will graduate from a high school in Washington, D.C. next June. She plans to study for a bachelor's degree in computer science and hopes to get a job that will offer her a good salary and the opportunity for career advancement. She is looking forward to living on campus but wants to be able to go home on some weekends to visit her family and friends. She would like to go to a coed college that is small enough that she won't feel "lost" but large enough to attract a diverse student body and offer a wide variety of campus social activities, including fraternities and sororities. She is a good swimmer and would like to compete in swimming at college.

How do Caroline's requirements affect her alternatives? The Handbook and Index list 338 undergraduate institutions in the District of Columbia, Maryland, and New York, and 181 of them grant bachelor's degrees. Of these, 120 offer a major in computer and information sciences. By applying some of her requirements in turn, Caroline developed a list of 12 colleges.

338 undergraduate colleges in the states selected

181 grant bachelor's degrees

120 offer a major in computer and information sciences

103 have no religious affiliation

97 are coed colleges

79 have college housing for women

57 offer swimming

44 have sororities

13 enroll more than 750 but less than 4,000 undergraduates

Caroline used most of her important requirements in finding these 12 colleges. She followed her counselor's advice not to eliminate colleges on the basis of cost until she finds out whether she is eligible for financial aid at the colleges that meet all her other requirements. Caroline's list would have looked very different if she had included costs as a factor. Only 3 of the 13 colleges that meet her needs report annual costs under $7,000, and for 2 of the 3 institutions, that is the student budget for state residents only; out-of-state students would pay a higher tuition cost which would raise the total expenses above $7,000. Caroline could choose to expand her list by considering colleges in other nearby states or colleges with large enrollments.

You may find you want to change or modify your requirements as you search for colleges. By all means, stick to your educational objectives, but don't limit your other options until you are certain that a particular characteristic is essential to your college experience. Even then, it is possible that no college will meet all your basic requirements. If this happens, you may have to decide which characteristics are most important to you.

Narrowing your list of colleges

At this point, your goal is to have a list of some 10 or 20 colleges to explore in more depth. The College Handbook and Index of Majors, and the College Explorer™ microcomputer program have been designed to help you with this task.

If you know the state or states where you want to attend college, turn to these states in The College Handbook. The first seven characteristics on the worksheet you completed will be found in the opening paragraph of each college description. If the college meets these basic requirements, read on.

If you know what you want to study, but not where, consult the Index of Majors. The Index lists over 500 major fields of study and the colleges, state by state, that offer them. Other lists in the Index that may help you narrow your choice include colleges that have religious affiliations, special academic programs, and special admissions procedures.

The microcomputer is a powerful tool to help you in the college selection process. For example, the College Board's College Explorer microcomputer program lets you choose the college features most important to you and then searches through the colleges described in the Handbook to give you a list of those that match your requirements. Check to see if your school guidance office or library has a copy of College Explorer for your use.

Once you know the names of the colleges that meet one or more of your major requirements, turn to their descriptions in the Handbook. (See the section "How to use The College Handbook" for detailed information on the full range of facts that may be given about colleges.) When you have completed your initial

"Reading the student newspaper from a college on the West Coast gave me a real feeling for the social and academic life the college could offer. I don't think I would have been interested in that college if I hadn't read the newspaper." (High school senior, New Jersey) search and identified colleges you want to explore in more depth, you are ready for the next step.

Learning more about colleges

The more information you can gather on the colleges that interest you, the better your chance of making a good decision. Start a file folder for each college you are interested in. Keep in it copies of any correspondence you have with the institution as well as application forms and financial aid information. Make a record of any college interview or conversation you have while your impressions are still fresh. Jot down the names of people you meet while on campus or the names of recent alumni who might serve as sources of additional information.

College information

Your first contact with a college will probably be a letter expressing your interest in the institution and requesting additional information. Be specific about the information you want, and tell the college something about yourself. Check the letter for spelling and grammar. This college may turn out to be your first choice. Whether or not you keep a file on the college, the college will certainly keep a file on you.

College catalogs and descriptive materials. The catalog is a basic source of information about a college. Although catalogs vary widely, most contain detailed information on admissions, student life, academic offerings, degree requirements, costs, and financial aid. Often the catalog will come to you with inserts indicating tuition and fee changes, adjustments to the academic program, or revised deadlines. College catalogs sometimes are available in your school library or guidance office, or may be obtained by writing directly to the college. Keep the catalog on file and refer to it whenever you have questions about the college's procedures or policies.

In addition to the catalog, many colleges provide descriptive materials highlighting important features of the institution. These include pictures of the campus and of student life that can help give you a feel for the college. Don't rely on pictures, however, or on an enthusiastic writer's description of the college in making a final decision. Read the college's materials carefully and critically, keeping your own objectives and needs clearly in mind.

College newspapers. If you are looking for current and candid information about day-to-day student life, try to obtain a copy of the student newspaper. Its news coverage, editorials, and listing of campus events could tell you a lot about college issues, student concerns, and campus activities.

College representatives. To learn more about a college that interests you, meet with a college representative. Someone with first-hand knowledge of the institution, who is qualified to answer your questions, can help you focus on what the college can do for you. Check with your school guidance office to see whether a recruitment or admissions officer from the college is scheduled to visit your high school. If not, write to the college requesting an appointment with a college representative in your area. Find out in advance whether a college you are considering will participate in a nearby college fair. Before you meet with a representative, draw up a list of questions about the college. Be prepared to explain what features of the college interest you most. The impression you make through an early contact with the college might be important if you decide to apply.

College visits. Probably the best way to learn more about a college is to visit the campus. If possible, plan to visit a college during the academic year, when students are in residence and classes are in session. Many colleges schedule regular campus tours conducted by student representatives and will arrange for you to spend the night in student housing if you write in advance.

During your visit, walk around campus until you have a feeling for its size and atmosphere. Find out about the things that are important to you. For example, if getting around campus is a concern, you should note the distance from the dormitories to classroom buildings and from class to class. Would you walk, or do you need transportation? You might be interested in how old or new the buildings and facilities are, how crowded the classrooms, how large the dormitory space, and what the recreational facilities are like.

Plan to visit the student center, the cafeteria, and the library. Talk to students wherever you go. Ask about the social life on campus, student lifestyles, and anything else that might help you decide if you would be comfortable at the college. Check bulletin boards to find out about student activities and cultural events. Try to attend some classes and meet with students and faculty in the area that interests you. Ask about specific course requirements, program flexibility, average study time, and academic pressures.

If you plan to combine your campus visit with an admissions interview, be sure to write to the admissions office and set up an appointment before you arrive.

College students or recent alumni. If you are considering a college far from home, it may be impossible for you to visit the campus. Ask the college for names of recent graduates or current students who live in your area. If you plan in advance, you may be able to meet with students who are home on vacation. Often college alumni will be happy to talk to you about their alma mater. Impressions and opinions about current student life and campus activities can be useful to you.

High school guidance counselor and teachers

Your high school guidance counselor and teachers can be invaluable sources of information about colleges. Don't miss out on their expertise. Your guidance counselor is a trained professional who can help you make realistic decisions about college applications and help you predict what the outcome of your decision will be. Consult your adviser as early as possible in the college-selection process; discuss your goals and objectives and get advice on which colleges might best help you accomplish your objectives. If you already have some colleges in mind, your counselor may be able to give you some facts about the number of students in your high school or region who applied and were accepted in previous years and what their college experience has been. Frequently your adviser has the most objective view of your school record and can give you sound advice on your chances of being accepted—or of being comfortable—at one or more of the colleges you are considering.

Parents and friends

According to a group of recent college-bound students, family and friends are one of the best sources of information about colleges. Like admissions counselors, your parents and close friends can help not only in giving you information about colleges but also in evaluating the information in terms of your own objectives and needs. Discuss the colleges you are considering with your parents. Can they recommend alternatives? Do they think you should be considering other types of colleges? Why? Do you agree or disagree with their advice? Why? Go over your list of reasons for going to college and review your checklist of college characteristics. Is there anything you would like to change based on your discussions?

Your friends, too, can be a good source of information and advice. Find out what colleges they are considering and why. If the college meets your major requirements, add it to your list for further exploration. Are any of your friends or classmates considering applying to the same colleges you are? Pool your resources and exchange information. Share the college selection process with them. Find out about students who have graduated from your high school recently and ask them about their experiences at college. Even when the final decision is yours, it often helps to talk it over with people whose opinions you trust and can rely on.

> "My parents helped me evaluate all the college information.
> They listened and sometimes gave advice, but never tried to make up my mind for me."
> (High school senior, Texas)

Deciding where to apply

> "You can play games with yourself. You can say it's not important or that you don't care. But deep down, you spend half your time worrying." (High school senior, Illinois)

You will probably find that the most difficult part of the college selection process is trying to predict what will happen as a result of your decision. Will you be accepted by a college if you apply? Will you be happy at the "college of your choice?" Unfortunately, even good decisions cannot guarantee successful results. By its nature, decision-making involves risks. You will be in a better position, however, to judge the degree of risk and uncertainty if you do a thorough job of collecting and evaluating information.

College admissions: Predicting your chances

What are your chances of being accepted at the college or colleges you prefer? According to a 1980 report on undergraduate admissions policies published by the College Board, 83 percent of all college applicants can expect to be accepted by their first-choice colleges. Your chances of being admitted to a particular college, however, depend on the type of institution you are considering.

Most colleges fall into one of three categories of accessibility:

Open admissions colleges. These accept virtually all interested students who have a high school degree or its equivalent and even that requirement is sometimes waived for applicants above a certain age. Some open admissions institutions have selective requirements for specific programs such as nursing. These colleges report accepting 96 percent of their applicants.

Selective colleges. These colleges offer admission to all or most applicants who meet their explicit requirements. The requirements may vary widely from college to college and may be extremely rigorous, but you can be fairly sure of admission if you meet their specifications. The vast majority of colleges in this country classify themselves as "selective."

Competitive colleges. Like selective institutions, competitive colleges have explicit admissions requirements, but more applicants meet those requirements than they are willing or able to accommodate. You cannot be sure of admission to a competitive college, even though you satisfy its entrance requirements, because you will be competing with other equally qualified applicants. On the average, competitive colleges offer admission to about 56 percent of their applicants. In the face of such odds, you would be wise to apply to more than one college.

To find out whether a college you are considering has a competitive, selective, or open admissions policy, read the section on admissions in the college's Handbook description. Most colleges list the number of students who applied, were accepted, and enrolled at their institutions. This will tell you whether a college is highly competitive and indicate the probability of admission for all applicants.

To estimate your own chances of being accepted, study the college's admissions section carefully. Colleges list their selection criteria in the order of their importance. Unless you find that you are clearly not qualified, you should probably continue to consider a college rather than guess that you would not be admitted. Leave that decision to the college.

Factors mentioned most frequently by colleges as playing an important role in their admissions decisions are academic performance in high school (as indicated by school grade average or class rank), test scores, pattern of high school subjects completed, recommendations, and personal qualifications, such as motivation, special skills or abilities, leadership capabilities, community or church involvement, and good moral character. Compare your own achievements in these areas with the colleges' stated requirements. Note that the more competitive the college, the more likely it is to consider personal qualifications in admissions decisions. The contact you have with an admissions officer through your interview, essay, and recommendations can increase your chances of being admitted to an institution.

College costs

The cost of going to college is something that you and your parents should think about early in the college-selection process. You must have a clear idea of the costs at an institution in order to know whether you will need financial assistance to pay the bill.

Costs differ from one college to another, so you should make an estimate for each college you are considering. There are two categories of college expenses that you must think about—direct educational costs and living costs.

Direct educational costs		Living costs		Total costs
Tuition and fees Books and supplies	+	Room and board Personal expenses (clothing, laundry, entertainment) Transportation	=	____________

Comparing college costs

The Handbook descriptions include a section on annual expenses in which the typical expenses for undergraduate students living on campus are shown for a nine-month academic year. Keep in mind that college costs, like most other costs, are rising. All expenses are likely to be somewhat higher by the time you enter college and they will continue to rise while you attend. Be sure to verify current costs with the institution.

Student expense budget	College 1	College 2	College 3	College 4
(Write in college name)
Tuition and fees
Room/board*
Books and supplies
Other expenses
Transportation†
Other (such as cost of child care, expenses because of handicap)
Total budget

* You should consider these expenses to your family if you live at home.

† Because transportation costs vary widely for each student, no costs are listed in the Handbook. You should add your own estimate of the round trips you will make to your home. Students living at home should figure the costs of daily transportation to the college.

Number of colleges to apply to

There is no ideal number of applications for every student. A good rule of thumb is that you should file as many applications as you need—but no more than you need—to ensure that you will be accepted by a college you prefer. That may be one application or several, depending on your own requirements and on the admissions and financial aid procedures of the colleges you choose.

You have to make the final decision yourself on how many colleges you apply to, but most educators would advise you to limit your college applications. You may find out that your high school guidance counselor will make a strong recommendation on the total number of applications you should file. Don't apply indiscriminately. Think about your reasons for multiple applications.

If you are applying for financial aid and are not certain of receiving the aid you need, you may increase the number of applications you will want to file. If you are considering several competitive colleges and cannot be certain that you will be admitted to any of them, you might want to apply to them all. If you cannot make up your mind between two colleges and believe that the extra time will help you make a final decision, then apply to both. You should certainly apply to at least one college that meets all your requirements (including costs) and where you are quite certain of being admitted. Don't apply to colleges that you don't want to attend simply to satisfy someone else or to prove that you can get in.

Early Decision Plan

You can cut down on the number of applications you file without reducing your chances of admission or financial aid at any college by applying under the Early Decision Plan. If you are sure of the college you want to attend and think you are likely to be accepted, consider applying for early decision under a single- or first-choice plan. (See the Glossary for more information.)

Both plans require that

- you (not the college) initiate the application
- you complete your application for admission and financial aid (if appropriate) early in the fall of your senior year and no later than November 15
- you take all required tests before the fall of your senior year

The college will then notify you of its admissions and financial aid decisions by December 15. If you are not accepted under early decision, your application is reconsidered without bias under the college's regular admissions plan.

Applying to college

The procedures for applying for admission vary from one college to another, but usually the first step is to get an application form and instructions from the college. (If you requested an application when you first wrote to the institution, it should be in your college file.) Follow the college's instructions carefully. Make sure you know what you must supply and when it must reach the college.

What colleges require

Application fee. Most colleges charge an application fee, usually not refundable even if your application is rejected. Many colleges will waive this fee for applicants from low-income families, such as those who are eligible for public assistance. If you think you qualify ask your counselor about the procedures to follow.

Application form. Almost all colleges require that you submit an official application form providing information about your background, previous education, and college plans. At many institutions the form is brief and uncomplicated and can be completed very quickly. At other colleges, particularly competitive institutions, you will be asked to provide detailed information about

> "Perhaps the most valuable result of all education is the ability to make yourself do the thing you have to do, when it ought to be done, whether you like it or not."
> (Thomas Huxley, Technical Education)

your academic record, extracurricular activities, work experience, interests, talents, and achievements. Be prepared to give the time and thought needed to provide a complete picture of yourself for the college to consider.

Secondary school or college transfer record. You may receive a form for an official of your high school or college to complete with a transcript of your courses and final marks, test scores, and teacher and counselor recommendations. If this is included in your admissions materials, take it to your guidance office as soon as you have completed your part of the application. Some colleges send this form directly to the school or college after receiving your application.

Admissions test scores. Many colleges require that you take one or more standardized admissions tests. The most common tests used are the College Board's Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) and Achievement Tests, and the American College Testing Program Assessment (ACT). Plan to take the tests at least six weeks before the college's application deadline to allow enough time for the score report to reach the college. If you have already taken the SAT or ACT and are requesting that your scores be sent to a college not listed on your original application, allow at least four weeks for the score report to reach the college.

If you take the SAT or the Achievement Tests, your scores will be sent to you along with information that can help you and your parents and counselors in the college planning process. The report you will receive displays your scores in a way that indicates the range of your abilities and helps you estimate what your scores might be if you took the test again. It also reports back to you the information about yourself that you provided on the ATP registration form (educational background, type of college you wish to attend), and lists admissions and financial aid information for those colleges which, as you requested on your registration form, will receive your scores.

Letters of recommendation. Some colleges, especially private institutions, require that you submit one or more letters of recommendation from a teacher, counselor, clergyman, alumnus, or adult member of the community. As a courtesy, you should give people ample time to complete the recommendations and meet the college deadline.

Essay. A personal essay or autobiographical statement is required by some institutions, particularly four-year, private colleges. The essay can be especially important if you are not able to have an interview. Whether the college requests a general autobiographical statement or an essay on a specific theme, you should take the opportunity to express your individuality in a way that will set you apart from other applicants.

Interview. Many colleges require or recommend an interview of all or some of their applicants. Whether required or not, it is to your benefit to set up an interview—this is your chance to express personally your background, your interests and goals, and why you are interested in the college. An interview can be very important at institutions that have many applicants competing for admission. The interview also is your opportunity to assess the college. For this reason, an on-campus interview is best, but most colleges will arrange for you to be interviewed near your home if you live far from the college. Be prepared with your own questions. You can use this opportunity to get the information you need about a college to make your decision.

Audition/portfolio. If you are applying for admission to a particular program at the college, such as music, art, or design, you may have to demonstrate or document prior work. Be sure to check each college's requirements in the Handbook descriptions.

When to apply

You should begin the application process as soon as you have identified the college or colleges where you wish to apply. This should be as early as possible in your senior year, or at the end of your junior year if you are seeking early admission.

Colleges may state a closing date or deadline for applying, but this is often no more than a guideline. A

"I was positive that my school record wasn't good enough for certain colleges, but my guidance counselor persuaded me to apply, and I was accepted by two out of three colleges I didn't think I'd get into." (College freshman, Colorado) college may cut off applications earlier than its final date if it fills its class before then, or it may continue to accept applications beyond that date if it still has room for more students. If you decide you want to apply to a college whose final date has passed, telephone or write the admissions office to find out if applications are still being accepted. As a general rule, be aware of college deadlines, but set your own deadlines for completion of your part of the process. Make a checklist to help you outline the admissions requirements and deadlines for each college. If you are applying for aid, include financial aid deadlines so that you have a central list of the college's requirements.

When you hear from the colleges

Waiting to hear from the college or colleges of your choice is sometimes the hardest part of the college-selection process. Even after you have heard from the colleges, you still may face some difficult decisions.

If you are accepted by more than one college . . .
If you applied and were admitted to several colleges, you have to decide which to attend. You may already know your order of preference, but if you are still unsure, you may have to go through the decision-making process again, clarifying your objectives, getting additional information, and talking to your parents and counselors. Don't be surprised if all your efforts at deciding still leave you with two or more colleges that seem to offer equal prospects. It probably means that you have done such a good job of selecting that you will be happy with whichever of the colleges you attend.

If you hear from your second-choice college first . . .
Your final decision can be complicated if you have to respond to your second- or third-choice college before you have heard from your first-choice college. Often that response includes a substantial first payment of a tuition fee or dormitory charge. If this happens to you, ask your counselor for help in deciding on a course of action. Some students are able to get a preliminary, if unofficial, decision from their first-choice college by calling or writing the admissions office. Others solve the problem by making the required first payment to the second-choice college as a kind of insurance premium to cover the possibility of rejection by the first-choice college.

If you are not offered the financial aid you need . . .
You may have to choose between different aid packages offered by different institutions. Your first-choice college, for example, may offer less aid in relation to costs than your second or third choices. Try to determine if there are other resources that you can tap for additional financial support. Only you can decide if your preference is so strong that it justifies the additional financial burden.

Looking ahead

If you follow the steps described in this section, you will probably find the colleges that offer you the best chance of getting the most from your college experience. There is no guarantee, of course, that things will turn out just as you had hoped. In fact, you can be sure that they won't, because you will change during your college years, the college will change, and most of all the world will change in ways that can't be foreseen. But you will also be developing your ability to adapt to change and to meet new situations, so there is an excellent chance that the differences you will encounter will add up to an even better college experience than you had expected.

Paying for college

Millions of students receive financial aid to help them continue their education. You do not have to be poor to qualify for financial aid, because aid is based on what you and your family are able to pay. Even students from families with high incomes are often eligible for aid, especially at higher-cost colleges.

Demonstrated need

Colleges, state scholarship programs, and other organizations award financial aid on the basis of demonstrated need. They believe that you and your parents have a responsibility to pay as much as you can toward your educational costs. Demonstrated need is the difference between what it costs to attend a college and how much your family can reasonably be expected to contribute.

Total college expense − Family contribution = Demonstrated need

Usually you are eligible for financial aid equal to the amount of your demonstrated financial need. Since what you can afford to pay stays the same whether college costs are high or low, you may be eligible for different amounts of aid at different institutions. Don't rule out applying to any college that interests you on the basis of its costs alone.

Types of aid available

Grants or scholarships. These are types of aid that do not have to be repaid (sometimes called gift aid).

Loans. These usually have low interest rates and must be repaid, but generally only after you have graduated or left college.

Student employment. This can be a job that the college finds for you or work you find on your own that is funded through a financial aid program.

Financial aid can come from several different sources: the federal government, state government, colleges themselves, and a wide variety of private organizations and scholarship programs.

Sources of financial aid

The major financial aid programs are described here:

Institutional funds. Most colleges have their own scholarships or grants as well as loan and work programs funded from endowments and operational budgets.

Federal programs. Please note that financial aid programs listed here as sponsored by the federal government may be changed or eliminated by legislation pending in Congress at the time this book is being published.

Campus-based aid. There are three major federal programs that are campus-based, that is, directly administered by colleges. Nearly all colleges participate in these programs.

Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant Program (SEOG) provides grants of up to $2,000 for students with financial need.

National Direct Student Loan Program (NDSL) provides loans for students with demonstrated need. No interest is paid while you are enrolled in college. When you leave college, you must repay with 5 percent interest.

College Work-Study Program (CWSP) provides jobs for students with demonstrated need.

Colleges may also administer other federal programs, including ones to assist students who enter nursing and other health programs.

Pell (Basic) Grants. The federal government also sponsors the Pell Grant program. These grants ran as high as $2,100 in 1985-86 although the maximum may vary from year to year depending on the level set by Congress. The grants are based on your family's financial circumstances and may be used at the college of your choice.

Guaranteed Student Loan. The federally sponsored Guaranteed Student Loan Program (GSL) is an important source of loan funds. These loans are made primarily by banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions, but some colleges are also lenders.

The federal government pays the full 8 percent interest on these loans while you are enrolled in college. When you graduate or leave a college, you must begin repaying the loan with interest.

Parent Loan Program. The federally sponsored Parent Loans for Undergraduate Students (PLUS) allows parents of students to borrow money to help with their children's college costs. The current interest rate is 12 percent, and repayment begins 60 days after the loan is disbursed.

State funds. All states have scholarship or grant programs to help you attend the college of your choice. The regulations and application procedures for these programs vary from state to state. Ask your guidance counselor for information about your state's program or write to the state department of higher education in your state capital.

Community funds and other sources. Financial aid is also provided by community agencies, foundations, corporations, unions, religious organizations, clubs, and civic, cultural, and fraternal groups. Need is usually considered, but other factors may be taken into account in determining a student's eligibility. Check with your counselor for information on local aid sources.

Comparing financial aid

You should compare the types of aid offered by the colleges you are considering. Remember that the percentages listed under grants, loans, and jobs in the Handbook are for the total financial aid dollars distributed by each college in the 1985-86 academic year (or the most recent year for which information was available). If you are eligible for financial aid, you probably will get a combination of gift aid and self-help aid (loans and jobs). This combination is called a financial aid package.

Financial aid checklist

If you think you need aid to continue your education, your chances of getting it are best if you apply in the right way at the right time.

Begin a year before you expect to enter college.

☐ Ask for information about financial aid opportunities and application procedures when writing to the admissions office of each college on your list.

☐ Search for special sources of aid. Your guidance counselor, high school library, and public library will often have this type of information. You may qualify for a private scholarship, grant, or loan program based on academic achievement, religious affiliation, ethnic or racial heritage, community activities, hobbies or special interests, organizational membership, artistic talents, athletic abilities, other special skills, career plans, or proposed field of study.

☐ Ask for information on federal student aid programs from your high school counselor.

☐ Ask about student aid available to residents of your state and how to apply for it.

☐ Make a financial aid calendar for yourself. Include (1) the name of each program you may be eligible for, (2) the deadline for applying to the program, and (3) an earlier deadline for yourself—a date by which you must have received and completed the application form and any other requirements in time to file your application by the program deadline.

☐ Make certain you know what need analysis form to file for federal student aid programs. The two most commonly used forms are the Financial Aid Form (FAF) of the College Scholarship Service and the Family Financial Statement (FFS) of the American College Testing Program. You can get these forms from your high school guidance office or a college financial aid office. The forms are generally available in November, but they should not be filed until after January 1.

☐ Plan a time when you can spend several hours on your applications. If you are a dependent of your parents, you should plan the time when they can work with you. Your parent or parents should have a copy of their most recent income tax return filed.

☐ Carefully follow the instructions for filling out your need analysis form. Make sure your answers are complete and correct.

☐ Apply for a Pell Grant. You can use the FAF or FFS to apply for this important federal program simply by checking the appropriate box on the form. There is no extra fee for this service.

☐ Apply for a state scholarship or grant. In many states your need analysis form can also be used to apply for state aid. Your guidance counselor knows whether you must fill out additional application forms.

☐ Mail your completed need analysis form as soon as possible after January 1. Send the form for processing at least four weeks before the earliest financial aid deadline set by the colleges, state scholarship programs, or other grant programs for which you may be eligible (but not before January 1).

☐ Review the acknowledgment you receive after submitting your need analysis form. Make certain that all colleges and programs you indicated are correct on the acknowledgment. Respond promptly to any request for additional information.

☐ Check to see if other financial aid forms are required by the colleges to which you are applying. Complete the forms as early as possible and return them to the college.

☐ If you think you may be eligible for aid through the Veterans Administration, the Social Security Administration, or a vocational rehabilitation or other social service agency, contact the nearest office for information.

☐ Determine how payments from each aid source will be made to you. Generally, payment of financial aid is made at the time you enroll. Find out if there are additional procedures or forms to file in order to receive the aid.

☐ Pay close attention to award letters. Notify the college whose offer you are accepting, and inform the other colleges of your decision so that the financial aid reserved for you can be freed for other applicants. If you also receive aid notices from the state or federal programs, read them carefully and be sure to follow any directions they contain so that you can be certain of getting your aid.

☐ Explore alternatives. If the college of your choice cannot provide you with enough aid to meet your full financial need or if your family cannot contribute what is expected, you may want to consider borrowing. Learn about loans—the interest rates, repayment schedules, and other terms and conditions—before you apply. Government-sponsored loans, such as the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, usually have the lowest interest rates and the most flexible repayment arrangements. If you do apply for a Guaranteed Student Loan, give yourself enough time (at least six weeks) to have the loan papers processed.

How to use The College Handbook

The college descriptions

General information

The full descriptions follow a common outline to make it easy to find a particular item of information in any description and to compare one college with another. Each statement begins with general information about the college, followed by information about curriculum, admissions, student life, annual expenses, financial aid, and where to write or call for more information. Colleges are listed by their full names, which are not always the ones in popular use. If a college is part of a complex system, it usually appears under the system name.

The general information at the beginning makes it possible to classify the college quickly according to certain major characteristics—the number of years of undergraduate education available; type of institution (liberal arts college, university, community college, for example); whether it is public, private, or proprietary; whether it is for men or women or both; its religious affiliation, if any; and the year the college was founded. Other major characteristics presented here are:

Accreditation. If a college is accredited by its regional association of schools and colleges or by a national association for accreditation of specific types of colleges, such as Bible colleges or trade and technical schools, the accreditation is shown here. (Accreditation information was taken from 1985-86 Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education, published for the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation by the American Council on Education, and is the only information in the descriptions that does not come from the colleges themselves.) See the Glossary for additional information on accreditation and accrediting associations.

Undergraduate and graduate enrollment. The figures here give you the best indication of the size of the institution and the general categories of students enrolled in the fall of 1985.

Degrees offered. Colleges offer associate degrees after completion of at least two but less than four years of study. A bachelor's degree (sometimes called a baccalaureate) is generally awarded after four years of study. Certificate or diploma programs are offered by many colleges including some institutions that do not award either associate or bachelor's degrees. Graduate programs leading to master's, doctor's, or first professional degrees vary in length.

Calendar. The academic calendar used by the institution can affect your vacation and work plans and the length of time it takes to complete a degree. The most common college calendars are described in the Glossary.

Location. The general size and geographic location of the community in which a college is located can help you determine the character of the institution and the number of off-campus activities available.

Campus environment. The campus environment has been characterized as urban, suburban, or rural by the college. If possible, try to visit the campus to get your own impression.

Library holdings. The numbers of book titles and periodicals in the college library or libraries are given here.

Special features. Some colleges have unique characteristics that would be of interest to applicants. These features include special programs and facilities, and other campus locations.

Curriculum

Major fields of study. The fields in which undergraduates can specialize are grouped under general categories so that closely related subjects will usually be found together in the same category. Do not confuse the general category heading with the specific majors offered by the college. Colleges that offer both associate (A) and bachelor's (B) degrees have the degree level indicated after the major (A or B, or A/B if offered at both degree levels). Colleges reported their major programs by checking a standard list (see list below) based on the Higher Education General Information Survey (HEGIS) Classification of Instructional Programs of the National Center for Education Statistics. Additional majors that are not on the standard list are given at the end of the standard categories. A college name for some majors might not exactly match the title on the list. Consult the college's catalog for detailed descriptions of the majors offered.

Graduate programs. Broad rather than specific graduate programs are listed to give prospective undergraduates an additional clue to the interests and emphases of the faculty and student body. Consult the Index of Majors, 1986-87 for a detailed list of graduate degree programs at colleges listed in the Handbook, as well as programs at institutions that offer graduate study only.

First professional. Institutions that offer professional degrees, for example, law, medicine, or theology, have listed these here.

Academic programs and policies

Special academic programs. A college could indicate that it offers special programs, such as:

- accelerated program
- cooperative education
- double major
- honors program
- independent study
- internship
- external degree
- exchange student program
- study abroad
- teacher preparation
- liberal arts and career combination
- cross-registration
- weekend college

See the Glossary for brief descriptions of many of the above programs.

Special remedial services. Services are available at many colleges to help you improve or enhance your basic academic skills and provide you with instruction, counseling, and support services. These include:

- special counselors
- learning center
- preadmission summer program
- tutoring
- remedial instruction
- reduced course load

Military training. Air Force, Army, or Navy ROTC can prepare you for service as an officer in the armed forces after graduation and can also provide financial aid toward your educational expenses in exchange for longer periods of military service.

Tests used for placement and credit. Receiving college credit for what you already know, or being placed in an advanced-level course, can save you time and money in earning a college degree. College policies on the use of tests are listed here. More information about the most frequently used testing programs is given in the Glossary.

Academic regulations. At many colleges, freshmen must meet certain academic requirements to continue in good academic standing. Those requirements, the percentage of freshmen who complete the year in good academic standing, and the percentage of freshmen returning for the sophomore year are given here.

Additional information. Colleges with unique features in their curriculums include additional information here.

Special academic programs: Cooperative education, double major, honors program, independent study, student-designed major, study abroad, intensive English language program. Special remedial services: Remedial instruction, tutoring, special counselor, learning center. Military training: Air Force ROTC, Army ROTC, Navy ROTC. Placement or credit: AP Examinations used. Academic regulations: Freshmen must earn minimum grade-point average of 2.0 to continue in good academic standing. 80% of freshmen complete year in good academic standing. 85% return for sophomore year. Additional information: Cross-disciplinary University Professors Program available.

Admissions

1985 freshman class. To help you measure the chances that you or any other applicant will be admitted to a college, institutions were asked to report the number of students who applied, were accepted, and enrolled in their fall 1985 freshman classes.

Basis for selection. Admissions criteria used by the college in its selection process are listed in the order of their relative importance. Some colleges report their minimum qualifications explicitly. Special consideration given to particular groups of applicants is also listed if applicable.

The term open admissions indicates that the college generally accepts all high school graduates and other adults without regard to school records or other academic qualifications. Some colleges that characterize themselves as open admissions institutions use selective admissions criteria for certain programs (such as allied health sciences) and certain groups of students (such as out-of-state applicants).

Admissions requirements. Some colleges have very specific requirements in terms of educational background, high school courses taken, and test scores. High school graduation (or GED test) requirements, if any, are indicated here, as well as information about required or recommended interviews, portfolios, and auditions.

Most colleges will waive or modify their requirements in the case of an applicant for whom they are impractical or otherwise inappropriate. If you do not meet all the requirements stated by a college in which you are interested, do not assume that the college will not accept you. Write to the college about your deficiency, giving any other evidence of your qualifications that you can offer in its place.

Test requirements. Many colleges require national standardized admissions tests (SAT or ACT, ACH, TOEFL —see the Glossary for definitions) of their applicants. In some cases the tests required are used for counseling or placement only. Note the latest date by which test score reports must reach the college; this is often the same date as the college's application deadline. You should plan to take the tests by at least six weeks before the score report deadline.

Test scores. Colleges that require admissions tests are asked to provide the SAT or ACT score ranges of the middle 50 percent of their applicants, accepted applicants, and enrolled freshmen. You can compare your own scores with this information to determine whether they are compatible with those of other students applying. Keep in mind that 25 percent of the students in each category had lower scores and 25 percent scored higher.

Application fee. The amount of the fee, and whether it can be waived for applicants with financial need, is listed here.

Fall-term application procedures. Pay careful attention to any application deadline or priority date listed by the college. The date on which colleges begin notifying applicants of their admissions decisions can also be important in your college planning. Special admissions policies and procedures at some colleges, such as the Early Decision Plan (EDP), Candidates Reply Date Agreement (CRDA), deferred admission, and early admission are described in the Glossary.

Transfer applicants. The college might require transfer applicants to fulfill all freshman admissions requirements. Requirements that differ from those for freshman applicants are described here.

ADMISSIONS. 1985 freshman class: 9,352 men and women applied, 6,952 were accepted, 4,550 enrolled. Basis for selection: School grade average, test scores, and personal essay. Admissions requirements: High school diploma with college preparatory program. 16 units required, including English 4, mathematics 3, sciences 2, social studies 2. Audition required for music, dance applicants, portfolio required for art applicants. Essay required. Test requirements: SAT or ACT score report by July 31. 3 ACH required. Score report by July 31. TOEFL required of foreign students. Test scores: Middle 50% of enrolled, SAT-verbal 460-550, SAT-mathematical 490-570. Application fee: $25, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Fall-term application procedures: No closing date; priority given to applications received by February 12; applicants notified on a rolling basis. Early admission available. Transfer applicants: No closing date; priority given to applications received by March 1. High school and college transcripts required. Minimum 2.4 grade-point average required. Each student's record evaluated individually to determine number of transferable credits. Maximum of 105 quarter hours of transfer credit allowed toward bachelor's degree. Credit usually given for grades of 2.4 and higher in equivalent courses at approved institutions. Additional information: Special policies for adults over 25, part-time students.

Student life

1985 freshman class profile. Information provided here describes characteristics of the freshman class, including the percentage of students who are state residents, who live in college housing, who commute from home or private housing, who have minority backgrounds (American Indian, black, Mexican American, Oriental, Puerto Rican), and who are foreign nationals. Colleges also are asked to characterize their freshman class with respect to academic ability.

Programs undergraduates choose. This information indicates the academic interests of the total undergraduate population. Many colleges, however, will not require a student to declare a major until the junior year, so don't feel that you will have to commit yourself to a given field of study upon entrance.

Postgraduate studies. The percentage of students who continue their education within a year of completing their degree requirements at the college is listed.

Housing. The availability of college-affiliated housing and the type of accommodation offered are indicated if applicable.

Student activities. A broad range of activities available through the institution is listed, including:

- student government
- newspaper
- yearbook
- radio station
- drama groups
- choral groups
- dance
- orchestra
- band
- political groups
- religious organizations
- fraternities
- sororities

Athletics. Here are the college-sponsored intercollegiate and intramural sports for men (M) or women (W). (If an M or W does not appear after the sport, it is available for both.) The sports the colleges were asked about are:

- archery
- badminton
- baseball
- basketball
- bowling
- boxing
- cross-country
- diving
- fencing
- field hockey
- football
- golf
- gymnastics
- handball
- horseback riding
- ice hockey
- lacrosse
- paddleball
- racquetball
- rifle
- rowing (crew)
- rugby
- sailing
- skiing
- skin diving
- soccer
- softball
- squash
- swimming
- table tennis
- tennis
- track and field
- volleyball
- water polo
- wrestling

The college's membership in an athletic association, such as the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), is indicated here. Colleges were also asked to describe their sports facilities.

Consult the college catalogs to check on the availability of additional sports and the most current listing of all athletics.

Student services. Programs offered include personal counseling, career counseling, health services, job placement services, and services for the handicapped, veterans, and other special groups.

Additional information. Colleges may indicate features or policies that affect student life, such as religious and social standards and average age of students.

STUDENT LIFE. 1985 freshman class profile: 41% from in state, 80% live in college housing, 20% commute, 25% have minority backgrounds, 8% foreign students, 20% join fraternities/sororities. 95% were in top 10% of class, 4% in top quarter, 1% in top half. Average age is 18. Programs undergraduates choose: Arts and humanities 56%, engineering 44%. Postgraduate studies: 60% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Housing: Dormitories (coed); married student, fraternity, sorority, cooperative housing available. Student activities: Student government, student newspaper, magazine, yearbook, radio, drama, choral groups, dance, marching band, fraternities, sororities. Athletics: Intercollegiate: Baseball M, basketball, cross-country, football M, swimming, volleyball W, wrestling M. Intramural: Basketball, fencing W, soccer M, softball, tennis, volleyball. NAIA, NCAA. Athletic fields, gymnasium, pool, tennis courts. Student services: Personal counseling, health services, foreign student adviser.

Annual expenses

Tuition and fees. Costs are for the 1986-87 academic year and are based on full-time enrollment (approximately 30 semester hours or 45 quarter hours). When tuition and fees are higher for nonresidents, the additional amount for out-of-state or out-of-district students is also reported. If costs were not yet set, but the college has a reliable forecast of 1986-87 expenses, these projected costs are indicated. Where current figures are not available, the 1985-86 figures supplied by the college are indicated. If the college combines tuition, fees, room and board expenses, the single figure is called a comprehensive fee.

Room and board. The costs are for the 1986-87 academic year and represent the average cost for a full-time dependent student living in college housing. If single rooms or rooms for three or more students are available at a college, and you are interested in these living arrangements, your cost could be substantially more or less than the average shown here. Also, colleges often offer meal plans for fewer meals per week than the full-time meal costs, and this, too, may change the amount you spend for your meals.

Books and supplies. These costs may vary depending on the specific program in which you enroll. Some fields, such as art or architecture, may require more expensive supplies than average. Some colleges offer a book rental program, which can cut your costs.

Other expenses. The miscellaneous expenses for full-time dependent students living in college-affiliated housing include clothing, laundry, entertainment, medical insurance, and furnishings. Transportation costs are not included. If a college has no housing, miscellaneous expenses for commuters are given.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $5,880. Room and board: $3,000. Books and supplies: $450. Other expenses: $875.

Financial aid

Need-based aid. To help you measure the chances of receiving aid from a college, institutions were asked to report the number of accepted applicants (or enrolled freshmen) who were judged to have need and the number of those who were offered aid. Remember that many of the students awarded aid do not receive the full amount of their need.

Total aid distributed. The percentages of financial aid dollars distributed by an institution in the form of grants, loans, and jobs are given, as well as the percentage of freshmen and continuing students who received some form of financial aid. Colleges were asked to include all undergraduate aid that is college-funded, as well as certain federal aid programs for which colleges determine the recipients according to federal guidelines. (See the Glossary for brief descriptions of some of these programs—College Work-Study Program, National Direct Student Loan Program, and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant Program.) To make the data comparable, colleges were also asked to include Pell Grants (see the Glossary), which are generally processed by the institution, and Guaranteed Student Loans (see the Glossary). For additional information on types of financial aid available to students see "Paying for college."

Basis for selection. The percentage of financial aid dollars based entirely on need, on need and other criteria, and not based on need is presented, as well as criteria other than financial need (for example, academic achievement, talent, athletic ability) that contribute to financial aid decisions.

Application procedures. Most colleges that offer financial aid require applicants or their parents to fill out a need analysis document (such as FAF or FFS) to determine the extent of their financial need, or the college may require the Application for Federal Student Assistance (AFSA). State-specific forms (such as SAAC and PHEAA) sometimes appear in addition to national forms. In most instances, the state form may be the only document required of state residents, while the national form is required of out-of-state applicants. When you apply for financial aid, be sure to verify which document you should submit. Priority dates, closing dates, notification dates, and reply dates are listed here for the fall term.

FINANCIAL AID. Need-based aid: 2,750 accepted freshman applicants were judged to have need; 2,750 of these were offered aid. Total aid distributed: Grants 47%, loans 14%, jobs 39%. Basis for selection: 89% of grants based on need, 1% based on need and other criteria, 10% not based on need; all loans based on need; 98% of jobs based on need, 2% not based on need. Limited scholarships based on school grade average and test scores. Application procedures: No closing date; priority given to applications received by February 12; applicants notified on a rolling basis beginning on or about March 1; must reply within 3 weeks. FAF or FFS (FAF preferred).

Address/Telephone. The last item in each statement lists the mailing address and telephone number of the college office you should contact for further information.

ADDRESS/TELEPHONE. Admissions Office, Sample University, Young Town, Any State. (212) 335-6000.

Glossary

Definitions of commonly used terms vary from college to college. Consult specific college catalogs for more detailed information.

Accelerated program. A college program of study completed in less time than is usually required, most often by attending classes in summer or by taking extra courses during the regular academic terms. Completion of a bachelor's degree program in three years is an example of acceleration.

Accreditation. Recognition by an accrediting organization or agency that a college meets certain acceptable standards in its education programs, services, and facilities. Regional accreditation applies to a college as a whole and not to any particular programs or courses of study. Specialized accreditation of specific types of schools, such as Bible colleges or trade and technical schools, may also be determined by a national organization. Accreditation by regional accrediting associations and by national accrediting organizations is included in the Handbook descriptions of colleges. For the names and locations of these associations (and, in the case of regional associations, the states within each region) see the table below. Information about the accreditation of specialized programs within a college by organizations such as American Chemical Society, American Dietetic Association, etc., is given in Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education listed in the section of this book entitled "More Information About College."

Achievement Tests (ACH). College Board tests in specific secondary school subjects, given at test centers in the United States and other countries on specified dates throughout the year. Used by colleges not only in helping with decisions about admissions but also in course placement and exemption of enrolled freshmen.

Admissions Testing Program (ATP). A program of the College Board that provides college entrance tests and services for students planning to go to college. Included are the Scholastic Aptitude Test, Test of Standard Written English, Achievement Tests, and the Student Descriptive Questionnaire.

Advanced placement. Admission or assignment of a freshman to an advanced course in a certain subject on the basis of evidence that the student has already completed the equivalent of the college's freshman course in that subject.

Advanced Placement (AP) Program. A service of the College Board that provides high schools with course descriptions in college subjects and Advanced Placement Examinations in those subjects. High schools implement the courses and administer the examinations to interested students, who are then eligible for advanced placement, college credit, or both, on the basis of satisfactory grades.

Application for Federal Student Assistance (AFSA). The form distributed by the federal government for use by students applying for Pell Grants and federal campus-based aid. Some colleges accept the AFSA, but the majority require students to complete the Financial Aid Form (FAF) or Family Financial Statement (FFS). The FAF and FFS can be used as applications for federal student aid at no extra charge.

Associate degree. A degree granted by a college or university usually after the satisfactory completion of a two-year, full-time program of study, or its part-time equivalent.

Baccalaureate, or bachelor's degree. A degree received after the satisfactory completion of a four-year, full-time program of study (or its part-time equivalent) at a college or university.

Basic Educational Opportunity Program (BEOG). See Pell (Basic) Grant Program.

American College Testing Program Assessment (ACT). Test battery of the American College Testing Program, given at test centers in the United States and other countries on specified dates throughout the year. It includes tests in English usage, mathematics usage, social studies reading, and natural sciences reading. The composite score referred to in some colleges' descriptions is the average of a student's scores on these four tests.

Calendar. The system by which an institution divides its year into shorter periods for instruction and awarding credit. The most common calendars are those based on semesters, trimesters, and quarters.

Candidates Reply Date Agreement (CRDA). A college subscribing to this agreement will not require any applicants offered admission as freshmen to notify the college of their decision to attend (or to accept an offer of financial aid) before May 1 of the year the applicant applies. The purpose of the agreement is to give applicants time to hear from all the colleges to which they have applied before having to make a commitment to any one of them.

College-Level Examination Program (CLEP). A program of examinations in undergraduate college courses that provides students and adults the opportunity to demonstrate college-level achievement in the first and second year of college. The examinations are used by colleges to award advanced standing and grant credit-by-examination to entering freshmen and adults to complete their education. They are also used by business, industry, government, and professional groups to satisfy educational requirements for advancement, licensing, and admission to training programs.

College-preparatory subjects. A term used to describe admissions requirements or recommendations. It is usually understood to mean subjects from the fields of English, history and social studies, foreign languages, mathematics, science, and the arts.

College Scholarship Service (CSS). A service of the College Board that assists postsecondary institutions, the federal government, state scholarship programs, and other organizations in the equitable distribution of student financial aid funds. By measuring a family's financial strength and analyzing its ability to contribute to college costs, CSS need analysis services offer a standardized method of determining a student's need.

College Work-Study Program (CWSP). A federally sponsored program that provides jobs for students with demonstrated financial need. Generally, students are paid at least the federal minimum wage, and the jobs are available through colleges as well as public and private nonprofit agencies. Pending legislation could affect this program.

Comparative Guidance and Placement Program (CGP). A system of information gathering and interpretation designed by the College Board to help students in self-evaluation and in academic and career planning, to assist educators in the placement and counseling of those students, and to provide institutions with summary data for planning and research purposes.

Confidential Financial Statement (CFS). A need analysis form of the Financial Analysis Service.

Consortium. A voluntary association of two or more colleges providing joint services and academic programs to students enrolled in member institutions. Typical consortiums are made up of neighboring colleges. Students at one campus are allowed to attend courses and use the facilities at other member campuses.

Cooperative education. A college program in which a student alternates between periods of full-time study and full-time employment in a related field. Students are paid for their work at the prevailing rate. Typically, five years are required to complete a bachelor's degree under the cooperative plan, but graduates have the advantage of having completed about a year's practical work experience in addition to their studies. Some colleges refer to this sort of program as work-study, but it should not be confused with the federally sponsored College Work-Study Program.

Cross-registration. The practice, through agreements between colleges, of permitting students enrolled at one college or university to enroll in courses at another institution without formally applying for admission to the second institution.

Deferred admission. The practice of permitting students to postpone enrollment for one year after acceptance to the college.

Descriptive Tests of Language and Mathematics Skills (DTLS/DTMS). A set of nine diagnostic and placement tests used by colleges for entry-level placement and by students for self-assessment of strengths and weaknesses in important language and mathematics skills. The tests are offered by the College Board to assist students in self-directed learning activities and to help colleges in providing appropriate instruction.

Double major. Any program of study in which a student completes the requirements of two majors concurrently.

Dual enrollment. The practice of some colleges of allowing high school seniors to enroll in certain courses while completing their senior year. These students are not considered full-time college students.

Early admission. The practice of some colleges of admitting certain students who have not completed high school—usually students of exceptional ability who have completed their junior year. These students are enrolled full time in college.

Early decision. Early decision plans are offered applicants who are sure of the college they want to attend and are likely to be accepted by that college. An early decision application is initiated by the student, who is then notified of the college's decision earlier than usual—generally by December 15 of the senior year.

Early Decision Plan (EDP-F, EDP-S). Colleges that subscribe to this plan agree to follow a common schedule for early decision applicants. Colleges may offer either of two plans. A student applying under the first-choice plan (EDP-F) must withdraw applications from all other colleges as soon as he or she is notified of acceptance by the first-choice college. A student applying under the single-choice plan (EDP-S) may not apply to any colleges other than his or her first choice unless rejected by that institution. If a college follows either type of plan, applications (including financial aid applications) must be received by a specified date no later than November 15, and the college agrees to notify the applicant by a specified date no later than December 15.

External degree program. A system of study whereby a student earns credit toward a degree through independent study, college courses, proficiency examinations, and personal experience. External degree colleges generally have no campus or classroom facilities.

Family Financial Statement (FFS). A financial information collection document of the American College Testing Program's Financial Aid Services, used by parents of dependent students or independent students to supply information about their income, assets, expenses, and liabilities. The ACT Program uses this information in estimating how much money a family is able to contribute to a student's college expenses. Can be used to apply for a Pell Grant.

Financial Aid Form (FAF). A financial information collection document of the College Scholarship Service used by parents of dependent students or independent students to supply information about their income, assets, expenses, and liabilities. The CSS uses this information in estimating how much money a family is able to contribute to a student's college expenses. Can be used to apply for a Pell Grant.

Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse. This service helps overseas students interested in study at the undergraduate and graduate levels in the United States by identifying institutions that meet their particular interests and needs. Sponsored by the National Liaison Committee on Foreign Student Admissions and operated by the College Board, the Clearinghouse sorts by computer through the characteristics of over 1,900 colleges to select a list that matches a variety of specifications provided by each student. The resulting report sent to the student also includes information on admissions test requirements, financial aid for foreign students, total costs, and availability of on-campus services and housing.

4-1-4. A variation on the semester calendar system, the 4-1-4 calendar consists of two terms of about 16 weeks each, separated by a one-month intersession used for intensive short courses, independent study, off-campus work, or other types of instruction.

GED. See Tests of General Educational Development.

Grade-point average or ratio. A system used by many colleges for evaluating the overall scholastic performance of students. It is found by first determining the number of grade points a student has earned in each course completed and then dividing the sum of all grade points by the number of hours of course work carried. Grade points are found by multiplying the number of hours given for a course by the student's grade in the course. The most common system of numerical values for grades is A = 4, B = 3, C = 2, D = 1, and E or F = 0. Also called quality-point average or ratio.

Guaranteed Student Loan Program (GSL). A federal program that lets students borrow money for educational expenses directly from banks and other lending institutions (sometimes the colleges themselves). Dependent students may borrow up to $2,500 an academic year and up to $12,500 for the total undergraduate program. Students from families with an adjusted gross income in excess of $30,000 per year must demonstrate need in order to qualify. The federal government pays the interest while the student is in college. Repayment terms are favorable, and repayment need not begin until completion of the student's education. Pending legislation could affect this program.

Guaranteed tuition. A college may guarantee entering freshman that tuition charges will not increase during the four years of their study. This may require paying some tuition in advance. Tuition is then raised only for succeeding freshman classes.

Honors program. Any special program for very able students which offers the opportunity for educational enrichment, independent study, acceleration, or some combination of these.

Independent study. An arrangement that allows students to complete some of their college program by studying independently instead of attending scheduled classes and completing group assignments. Typically, students plan programs of study in consultation with a faculty adviser or committee, to whom they may report periodically and submit a final report for evaluation.

Interdisciplinary. Refers to programs or courses which use the knowledge from a number of academic disciplines, such as a combination of biology and physical sciences or of engineering and business.

Internships. Short-term, supervised work experiences, usually related to a student's major field, for which the student earns academic credit. The work can be full or part time, on or off campus, paid or unpaid. Student teaching and apprenticeships are examples of internships.

Liberal arts and career combination. A program in which a student completes three years of study in a liberal arts field followed by two years of professional/technical study (for example, engineering or forestry), at the end of which the student is awarded the bachelor of arts and bachelor of science degrees.

Multiple Assessment Programs and Services (MAPS). A service of the College Board that is comprised of tests to help colleges determine the placement levels and remediation requirements of incoming as well as continuing students.

National Direct Student Loan Program (NDSL). A federally funded program, administered by colleges, that provides low-interest loans of up to $3,000 for the first two undergraduate years and up to $6,000 for the total undergraduate program. Repayment need not begin until completion of the student's education or after limited periods of service in the military, Peace Corps, or ACTION. Repayment terms are favorable, and repayment may be partially or wholly waived for certain kinds of employment. Pending legislation could affect this program.

Need analysis form. A financial information collection document used by parents of dependent students to supply information about their income, assets, expenses, and liabilities. Independent students file these forms for themselves. The information is then used to estimate how much money a family or student is able to contribute to a student's college expenses. In many cases a single need analysis form is the only document that students need to submit to be considered for all types of institutional, state, and federal financial aid.

Open admissions. The college admissions policy of admitting high school graduates and other adults generally without regard to conventional academic qualifications, such as high school subjects, high school grades, and admissions test scores. Virtually all applicants with high school diplomas or their equivalent are accepted.

Pass-fail grading system. Some colleges permit rating students' quality of performance in their courses as either passing or failing instead of giving grades to indicate various levels of passing work. The college's entire grading system may follow this pattern, or it may be an optional one for individual students in specific courses.

Pell (Basic) Grant Program. A federally sponsored and administered program that provides grants based on need to undergraduate students. Congress annually sets the dollar range. Currently a Pell Grant cannot exceed $2,100 per year, but Congress can set a lower ceiling. Students apply directly to the federal government; the FAF or FFS can be used to apply for a Pell Grant. Formerly the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program (BEOG). Pending legislation could affect this program.

Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency (PHEAA) Document. A need analysis form used by Pennsylvania residents to establish eligibility for state aid. It is sometimes used to award institutional and campus-based federal aid, and can be used to apply for a Pell Grant.

Placement tests. Colleges often administer placement tests in reading, study skills, writing, computation algebra, and other areas to determine the level of student readiness for college study in particular subject areas. These test scores are used along with other information to place students into appropriate entry-level courses.

Preadmission summer program. A special program in which a student attends college during the summer preceding the freshman year. The program may consist of remedial studies to strengthen preparation for freshman courses, one or more of the regular freshman courses to enable the student to carry a light schedule in the freshman year, or both.

Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (PSAT/NMSQT). A shorter version of the Scholastic Aptitude Test administered by high schools each year in October. The PSAT/NMSQT aids high schools in the early guidance of students planning for college and serves as the qualifying test for scholarships awarded by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation and the National Hispanic Scholar Awards Program.

Quarter. An academic calendar period of about 11 weeks. Four quarters make up an academic year, but at colleges using the quarter system, students make normal academic progress by attending three quarters each year. In some colleges, students can accelerate their programs by attending all four quarters in one or more years.

Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC). Programs conducted by certain colleges in cooperation with the United States Air Force, Army, and Navy. Local recruiting offices of the services themselves can supply detailed information about these programs, as can participating colleges.

Residency requirements. Most colleges and universities require that a student spend a minimum number of terms taking courses on campus (as opposed to independent study or transfer credits from other colleges) to be eligible for graduation. Also, residency requirements can refer to the minimum amount of time a student is required to have lived in a state in order to be eligible for in-state tuition at a public (state-controlled) college or university.

Rolling admissions. An admissions procedure by which the college considers each student's application as soon as all the required credentials, such as school record and test scores, have been received. The college usually notifies applicants of its decision without delay.

Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). The College Board's test of developed verbal and mathematical reasoning abilities, given on specified dates throughout the year at test centers in the United States and other countries. It includes the Test of Standard Written English whose questions evaluate the ability to recognize standard written English, the language of most textbooks. The SAT is required of substantially all applicants by many colleges and sponsors of financial aid programs.

Semester. A period of about 17 or 18 weeks which makes up half of the usual academic year in colleges using this kind of calendar.

Semester at sea. A program for credit, usually for students with majors in oceanography or marine-related fields, in which students live for part of a semester on a ship, frequently a research vessel. Academic courses are generally taken in conjunction with the sea experience or at separate times during the semester.

Student Aid Application for California (SAAC). A need analysis form processed by the College Scholarship Service for California residents applying for aid. Can be used to apply for a Pell Grant.

Student Descriptive Questionnaire (SDQ). A questionnaire that can be completed by students when they register for the Scholastic Aptitude Test or Achievement Tests. It gives the student an opportunity to provide information about academic experience in high school, educational objectives, extracurricular activities, and areas in which counseling or assistance may be needed. The responses are sent, along with test scores, to the student's high school and designated colleges and scholarship sponsors. For those students who give their permission, selected information from the SDQ is also used by the Student Search Service.

Student-designed major. An academic program that allows a student to construct a major field of study not formally offered by the college. Often nontraditional and interdisciplinary in nature, the major is developed by the student with the approval of a designated college officer or committee.

Student Search Service. A College Board program designed to help colleges identify potential applicants with the particular academic or personal characteristics they are seeking. The service also provides students with an opportunity to learn about colleges with programs and characteristics they want. Information is gathered about students who wish to participate through the Student Descriptive Questionnaire of the ATP and the biographical section of the PSAT/NMSQT answer sheet. The College Board then supplies each participating college with the names and addresses of students who have the particular characteristics they specify. The service is free to students. Colleges can also identify students who participated in the Advanced Placement Program through the Advanced Placement Program Search.

Study abroad. Any arrangement by which a student completes part of the college program—typically the junior year but sometimes only a semester or a summer—studying in another country. A college may operate a campus abroad, or it may have a cooperative agreement with some other American college or an institution of the other country.

Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant Program (SEOG). A federal program administered by colleges that provides assistance for undergraduate students on the basis of need. Grants range from $200 to $2,000 a year. Pending legislation could affect this program.

Terminal program. An education program designed to prepare students for immediate employment. These programs usually can be completed in less than four years beyond high school and are available in many junior colleges, community colleges, and vocational-technical institutes.

Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL). Established by the College Board and the Graduate Record Examinations Board, this test helps foreign students demonstrate their English-language proficiency at the advanced level required for study in colleges and universities in the United States. Many colleges require their foreign applicants to take the test as part of their admissions requirements for both the undergraduate and graduate levels.

Tests of General Educational Development (GED). A series of five tests that adults who did not complete high school may take through their state education system to qualify for a high school equivalency certificate. The tests are also administered at centers outside the United States and to members of the armed services through the United States Armed Forces Institute. The tests cover correctness and effectiveness of expression, interpretation of reading materials in the social studies, interpretation of reading materials in the natural sciences, interpretation of literary materials, and general mathematics ability. Many colleges accept satisfactory GED test results in lieu of high school graduation.

Transfer program. An education program in a two-year college that is offered primarily for students who plan to continue their studies in a four-year college or university.

Transfer student. A student who has attended another college for any period, which may be defined by various colleges as any time from a single term to up to three years. A transfer student may receive credit for all or some of the courses successfully completed before the transfer.

Trimester. An academic calendar period of about 15 weeks. Three trimesters make up one year. Students make normal progress by attending two of the trimesters each year and in some colleges can accelerate their programs by attending all three trimesters in one or more years.

United Nations semester. A program in which students generally take courses at a college in the New York City metropolitan area while participating in an internship program at the United Nations.

Upper-division college. A college offering bachelor's degree programs that begin with the junior year. Entering students must have completed the freshman and sophomore years at other colleges.

Visiting/exchange student program. Any arrangement between a student and a college that permits study for a semester or more at another college without extending the amount of time required for a degree.

Washington semester. A program in which students participate in an internship program with a government agency or department in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area. Students earn field service credit for their work, and frequently take courses at area colleges.

Weekend college. A program that allows students to take a complete course of study and attend classes only on weekends. These programs are generally restricted to a few areas of study at a college and require more than the traditional number of years to complete.

Work-study. An arrangement by which a student combines employment and college study. The employment may be an integral part of the academic program (as in cooperative education or internships) or simply a means of paying for college (as in the College Work-Study Program).

Admissions

The College Admissions Organizer. This is a planning tool for college-bound students. Developed with the advice of guidance counselors throughout the country, it provides a step-by-step system to help users gather facts, organize tasks, record activities, and monitor their progress in the college admissions process. Included in the vinyl three-ring binders are inserts and fill-in forms, plus twelve large pockets designed to serve as a central storage kit for all the important admissions materials that students have to keep track of. New York: College Entrance Examination Board, 1986. $14.95.

Your College Application. A step-by-step guide to help students achieve their personal best on their college application. It provides practical guidelines for gathering necessary information and presenting it in a way that is realistic, appealing, and reveals the personal qualities that make each applicant unique. By Scott Gelband, Catherine Kubale, and Eric Schorr. New York: College Entrance Examination Board, 1986, 120 pp. $9.95.

ScoreSense. Developed jointly by the College Board and Educational Testing Service, ScoreSense is a microcomputer software program designed to help students find answers to the most commonly asked questions about the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). Using information from The College Handbook, ScoreSense shows students how their SAT scores compare to those of college-bound students across the country, as well as to those of students accepted or enrolled at particular institutions. New York: College Entrance Examination Board, 1985. $48.00.

TestSense. A software package designed to familiarize students with the PSAT/NMSQT. The package consists of two program disks plus a disk for student record keeping, user manuals for students and counselors, a colorful poster, and a sample test. New York: College Entrance Examination Board, 1985. $80.00.

Majors and careers

Index of Majors, 1986-87. An all-new listing of over 500 majors at more than 3,000 colleges and graduate schools, the Index tells which institutions, state by state, offer programs in each major. Programs leading to associate, bachelor's, master's, doctoral, and professional degrees are included. In addition, it identifies colleges that have special academic programs, special admissions procedures, and religious affiliations. New York: College Entrance Examination Board, 1986, 704 pp. $12.95.

College to Career: The Guide to Job Opportunities. This guide to more than 100 careers tells what the work is like, what education and personal skills are needed, how many people are employed and where, and starting salaries and future employment prospects. Also contains lists of related careers and sources of further information. By Joyce Slayton Mitchell. New York: College Entrance Examination Board, 1986, 336 pp. $9.95.

Occupational Outlook Handbook, 1986-87. Gives up-to-date information about more than 200 occupational areas, including the nature of the work, salary level, job prospects through the next decade, and education and training requirements. Additional information sources include publications and organizations that supply names of colleges offering preparation for various fields of work. U.S. Department of Labor, Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1984, 532 pp. $20.00 ($23.00 for hardcover).

What Color Is Your Parachute? Subtitled "A Practical Guide for Job-Hunters and Career Changers," this book is addressed primarily to people entering or already in the world of work, but high school and college students will find it useful in planning for their careers. By Richard N. Bolles. Berkeley, California: Ten Speed Press, 1986, 397 pp. $8.95.

College costs and financial aid

The College Cost Book, 1986-87. Provides step-by-step advice to help you and your family plan for meeting college costs. Using simple charts and worksheets, the Cost Book explains how to estimate college costs and your financial needs, what types of aid are available, and how to apply to the appropriate agencies. It also includes costs for 1986-87 at more than 3,500 two- and four-year institutions, as well as sample forms, a bibliography of aid sources, and a financial aid checklist. New York: College Entrance Examination Board, 1986, 216 pp. $10.95.

The College Board Guide to Going to College While Working: Strategies for Success. This book provides practical advice and tested strategies for fulfilling college goals while holding down a part- or full-time job. The author offers guidelines needed to: evaluate interests and career aims to determine college plans; locate the most suitable programs; finance the cost of college; mesh the demands of school with those of work and home; manage time efficiently; and much more. Includes worksheets, bibliography, glossary. By Gene Hawes. New York: College Entrance Examination Board, 1985, 160 pp. $9.95.

Need A Lift? Provides sources of career, scholarship, and loan information for all students, with emphasis on scholarship opportunities for veterans and their dependents. It includes information about state laws offering educational benefits. American Legion, P.O. Box 1055, Indianapolis, Indiana 46206, $1 (prepaid). Updated annually.

Financial Aids for Higher Education, 1985-86. More than 4,000 programs listed specifically for students entering as college freshmen. Updated biennially. Oreon Kessler, ed., 12th edition. Dubuque, Iowa: William C. Brown Company, 1986, 816 pp. $13.95.

Graduate programs

Directory of Graduate Programs, 1984-85. Provides comprehensive information on 12,000 graduate programs at more than 800 accredited institutions in the United States. Different fields of study are covered by each of the four volumes: Agriculture, Biological Sciences, Psychology, Health Sciences, and Home Economics; Arts and Humanities; Physical Sciences, Mathematics, and Engineering; and Social Sciences and Education. Graduate Record Examination Board and the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States. Princeton, New Jersey: Educational Testing Service, 1984, $10 per volume, $40 per set.

Guide to American Graduate Schools. Tells about graduate study opportunities at more than 600 accredited institutions. New York: Penguin Press, September 1986, 608 pp. $14.95.

Foreign study

The Learning Traveler, Vol. 1: United States College-Sponsored Programs Abroad: Academic Year. Describes more than 800 programs conducted around the world. With its companion volumes, The Learning Traveler, Vol. 2: Vacation Study Abroad, which contains more than 900 programs, and Vol. 3: Teaching Abroad, it is a comprehensive source of basic facts and guidelines to use in choosing foreign study programs. New York: Institute of International Education, Vol. 1, 1986-87 edition, 400 pp. $15.95; Vol. 2, 1986 edition, 400 pp. $15.95; Vol. 3, 1984 edition, 130 pp. $11.95.

Work, Study, Travel Abroad: Whole World Handbook. Deals with travel to and within other countries and regions of the world, living accommodations, and organized programs of work, study, and travel. This is a practical guide if you plan to include international experience in your higher education. Margaret E. Sherman, ed. New York: Council on International Education Exchange, 1986-87, 380 pp. $7.95.

Nontraditional study

Guide to External Degree Programs in the United States. Lists institutions state by state that offer external degree programs leading to associate or bachelor's degrees. Included are 150 programs in 113 areas of study; all institutions listed are regionally accredited. This book also tells about enrollment, grading systems, job placement assistance if available, and where you can write for further information. American Council on Education, One DuPont Circle, Washington, D.C. 20036. 1983, 2nd edition, 124 pp. $16.95.

Your College Degree: The External Degree Way. Provides valuable, basic information on earning an undergraduate or graduate degree through an external degree program—that is, one that requires minimal or no on-campus classroom attendance. This booklet discusses the types of institutions that offer external degrees, the importance of choosing an accredited program, sources of credit for past work or experience and costs. Specific colleges and programs are not listed, but a sample description of an external degree college is given. By William C. Haponski, Sandra G. Haponski, and Charles E. McCable. ETC Associates, Box 118-F, Oneida, New York 13421. 1983, 30 pp. $3.00 (prepaid; New York residents add sales tax).

Disabled students

Directory of College Facilities and Services for the Disabled. Lists more than 2,000 colleges and universities in the U.S. and Canada with facilities for disabled students. Includes a general description of the college, total enrollment and number of disabled students, description of facilities, ratings of accessibility, listing of services for various types of disabilities, special features, and person to contact for information. Phoenix, Arizona: Oryx Press. 1985, 2nd edition, 424 pp. $95.00.

General

Everywoman's Guide to Colleges and Universities. Contains information and statistics on the services and facilities available to women on college campuses. Descriptions of nearly 600 two- and four-year colleges include the number of women administrators and faculty, policies to ensure fairness to women, minority staffing and services, athletics for women, and the availability of counseling, health care, daycare, and other services.
